With great tenderness and care the once strong, active middy was carried on shore. Alive he certainly was, but God alone knew whether the terrible hardships he had undergone would not yet cost him his life. When he was safely conveyed to the hotel, Alick sent a telegram. Bob is alive. Father had better come. And that brown envelope--that pink sheet of paper--brought such joy into the house at Cray, that not one of those who rejoiced forgot to pray that God would have mercy on all whose hope had died that day.
