On Earth, before writhing and printing, there was always poetry. . (Pablo Neruda, Chile) Every human being has a talent, a hidden art. We need to reach deep inside us and discover it, so that we can find a conduit through which we can express our individual and unique way of thinking and perceiving the world that surround us. Through writing of any genre, the writer gives birth to his self-expression, bringing to light stories that come from his wealth of experiences; including the ones he was taught, according to the stereotypical rules and regulations of a bland society, and those learned by living them on his own. As a storyteller, I yearn to convey positive values and messages of harmony through my writings. To me, the fictional characters created by a writer are like laboratories of the human soul where the art of storytelling, in conjunction with the metaphors of poetry, create an intercultural environment in which the characters live. This Collection of short stories and poems, narrated here with a...
