Small cows do not require more than 4 feet and 9 inches of standing floor, and for oxen, 5 feet is enough. Three and a half feet is ample width for cows. Some stables are made with the platform, or standing floor, three inches less at one end than the other, for the shorter cows. The stanchion for fastening is the mode here used, almost without exception. N. R. -V. r. The Cattle Plague. --It begins to look as if the rinderpest had about reached its maximum in England and Scotland. For several weeks ttaefe has been no important increase in the weekly reports of cases--the number having ranged from 12, 000 to 13, 000 per week. The Farmer remarks, as an evidence that the disease is assuming a milder type, the fact that a number of recoveries during the last week of February was a fraction over 13 per cent, of the number attacked, against but little more than 5 per cent, early in November last: This modification of the virulence of the disease is no doubt the reason why many nostrums are now being found, as it is supposed, successful, while it is not improbable the affected animals might recover without any special treatment. We know of a case where nine bullocks, graziug in one field, were all taken ill. Tbe owner allowed them to tukc their chance, having no faith iu doctors or drugs, and the result is that,...
