Not illustrated. 1867 Excerpt: . a spiritual experience, but it was also a discipline of character whose results were exhibited in the continually renewed struggles and progressive achievements of life. The earthly story of this love--its beginning, its irregular course, its hopes and doubts, its exaltations and despairs, its sudden interruption and transformation by death--is the story which the Vita Nuova tells. The narrative is quaint, embroidered with conceits, deficient in artistic completeness, but it has the naivete and simplicity of youth, the charm of sincerity, the freedom of personal confidence; and so long as there are lovers in the world, and so long as lovers are poets, so long will this first and tenderest love-story of modern literature be read with appreciation and responsive sympathy. But The New Life has an interest of another sort, and a claim upon all who would read the Divine Comedy with fit appreciation, in that it contains the first hint of the great poem itself, and furnishes for it a special, interior, imaginative introduction, without which it is not thoroughly to be understood. The character of Beatrice, as she appears in the Divine Comedy, the relation in which the poet stands to her, the motive of the dedication of the poem to her honor and memory, and many minor allusions, are all explained or illustrated by the aid of the Vita Nuova. The Vita Nuova is the earliest of Dante's writings, and the most autobiographic of them in form and intention....
